The Treasure Map

Jayda and Sara sat on their porch.

“I wish we had a treasure map,” Jayda said.

Sara nodded. “We can probably make one,” she said.

“Yes,” said Jayda, “but we don’t have any treasure hidden.”

“I have an idea,” Sara said. “I’ll hide some treasure, and you make the map. I’ll use coins as treasure.”

Sara went to hide the coins while Jayda gathered art supplies. Then, when Jayda sat down to create the map, she realized there was a problem.

“Sara,” called Jayda.
“How can I make this map? You’re the one who knows where the treasure is!”

Map Tools

Maps help us find places when we travel. They show us how many miles one place is from another place. They show how land areas look from above.

Markings on a map stand for real things in the world. Many maps have a tool called a key. The key tells us what the markings mean. For example, blue lines might show rivers.

Most maps have a tool called a compass rose. This tool shows a map's directions: north, east, south, and west.

Reading a map may seem difficult. But a map's tools make it easier to use.

The Great Zoo Escape

"I promised we would escape," the old ostrich told her flock.

A younger ostrich said, "Yahoo, no more zoo!"

Each creature looked happy. The animals had run away on tiptoe past the zoo patrol.

"We're free!" two donkeys shouted.

"But I'm hungry," one of the amphibians said.

"Who will feed us?"

The animals looked at each other.

"I'm tired," said the mare, "and I miss my bed."

Nobody knew what to say.

Then the gorilla made a speech. "This was fun," he said.

"Now, shall we tiptoe back inside?"

The animals cheered and shouted,

"Let's go home!"

The Bronx Zoo Cares

The Bronx Zoo is enormous. It has 650 different kinds of animals. It has a total of 4,000 animals.

On a tour, you can see the animal homes. They are like the places where the animals live in the wild. For example, the gorillas in the zoo live in a forest with streams and trees.

Tigers have special homes, too. Tigers like warm rocks and cool water, and they have these at the zoo. The zoo controls the temperatures.

The homes are all hard to build and cost money. They show that the Bronx Zoo cares about its animals.
